

On the streets of Marrakech the activity boils, people move, the person move from one place to another in the city, either on foot, by bicycle or motorcycle. The carts are common and carry all kinds of objects, from fruit to building materials. The streets are narrow and all this activity is possible by years of living together vehicles, animals and people.

Motorcycles, cars, bikes, people ... through the narrow streets

Working with the donkey

Snake charmers

Tourist with monkey and snake

But, if there is a place in Marrakech where you can see all this street life is in the Djemaa el Fna Square. By day you can find all kinds of snake charmers, water sellers with flashy costumes, people doing theater and involving the public in their performance, and many kinds of street stalls. At night, things change radically and the square is filled in a blink with food and juice stands. There are people who specialize in the demand of tourists and non-tourists, people who speak many languages and know all the tricks to rip a smile and make you sit at their establishment where you will savor grilled meats and vegetables.

Panoramic view of the market

See you next time ...